HUNTINGTON — Gateway's Learning Resource Center was humming Monday with students taking advantage of the annual Career Day.

Representatives from business, public works, career schools and various other fields shared their information and their experiences with the students.

Some 50 tables and booths were set up in the L.R.C. and students had the opportunity to find just what jobs are available, be it banking, graphic arts, pharmacy, dentistry, tool making or trades such as stone cutting.

The three branches of the armed services were also represented and attracted many interested in the opportunities offered for future schooling and as a career.

Judy Syron, director of the Occupational Resource

Department, was in charge of Career Day. Lunch was served to all guests and citizens who took part in the program.
